

Phantom Billstickers

National Poetry Day Schools Guide

Stuck for ideas? Need a bit of guidance? Keen to see what types of poetry you can create with your students?

New Zealand's much-loved children's poet, Paula Green, who runs the popular Poetry Box blog, has put together this guide to provide inspiration.

'Poetry is a fabulous playground. You can swing on words, slide on similes, climb on rhyme, leap along lines, dream on balancing beams...' Paula Green.

Phantom Billstickers National Poetry Day is celebrated every year in August, an event that has something for everybody, from seasoned poets to total newbies! It is a celebration of the joy of the written and spoken word. The magic and excitement of poetry pervades the day, with the poetry community turning out in droves to discover New Zealand poets, share poetry and connect through this medium.

Schools have been a massive part of Phantom Billstickers National Poetry Day from its inception! This guide covers some of the more popular events and types of poetry you can use with your classes, and gives a bibliography of New Zealand poetry books for children.

Activities

- Go on a poetry trail. Take a group on a walk with pad and pens. You could walk around the school, along the nearby streets, or beach, or park, or stream, or bush. Hunt for words and phrases. You could make a sheet before you go. Hunt for nouns, verbs, sounds, smells, movement, fascinating details, colours, similes. Either find a good place to stop or back at school, and use the words to make a poem.
- Chalk poems. Using poems they have written or found in books, get children to chalk these around the school. Each class could chalk their favourite poems outside their classrooms. You could make a poem trail in the playground. Groups could follow the trail, reading the poems, and pick a favourite. Choose a theme!

• Ask libraries or bookshops if they will display a few of your postcard poems in their shop windows or put them on display on Phantom Billstickers National Poetry Day.

• Take a group of children to read some poems in a retirement village on Phantom Billstickers National Poetry Day. I have done this several times with children and it is one of the most heart-warming things I have done.

• Get your local library to invite people in for morning tea and listen to children from your school read some poems.

• Go on a poetry picnic. Pack a snack, invite grandparents, and find a perfect spot in your school grounds to have a picnic and listen to the children read some poems. If it is wet, you can always picnic in the hall or classrooms.

• Try a poetry slam! Perform your poems in front of the class or syndicate or school. Make a list of who is performing. The sound in slam poetry is important. Rhythm is important. You might play with rhyme. You might write poems that show how you feel or what you think about something. There might be a time limit. You might recite the poem off by heart. You don't usually use props but you can use gestures. Slam events can be competitive, but they don't have to be. They can just share the love of poetry. The audience can show appreciation with finger clips and claps and whoops.

Types of Poems

For examples, please see the appendix

List Poems

List poems make lists of things that fascinate you. They might play with sound, have twisty endings or twisty beginnings, show what's in your fridge, under your bed, in the sky, a colour, a season, what's soft or hard, quiet or noisy, near or far, tastes good, tastes yuk, makes you happy, sad, wild, reminds you of something or somewhere. You can use short lines or long ones. You can rhyme or not rhyme. List poems are such fun to write.

From Paula Green's Letterbox Cat

Postcard Poems

Try writing a postcard poem from where you LIVE or a favourite place in New Zealand. Use your eyes to collect all the LITTLE things and the BIG things you can see where you live. Put some of them in a poem. Real DETAIL will make your poem SHINE. Your poem uses words like it is the p i c t u r e on the front of the postcard! Use your ears to see how many words to put on each line. What works best when you read it aloud?

Picture Poems

Pick a topic (winter, the beach, kites, trees, cats, dogs, lunch, the street, boats, YOUR CHOICE!). Collect as many words as you can. Try making some poem lines of different sizes that you can put in your picture. Draw a faint outline of where you want the words to go. Fill the picture with your words (words don't need to be everywhere!). Do you need to draw any extra details (like eyes or teeth or shoes or whiskers)? Go over the words with coloured pens. Give the poem a title. Try reading it. Usually there are lots of ways to read a picture poem. You can call it a picture poem, a SHAPE poem or a CONCRETE poem. Over to you!

Winter Poems

If you look out the window or walk down the street, how do you know it's winter? Brainstorm winter things: food, clothes, activities, weather, trees, sky, weather. Hunt for nouns and verbs. Show me winter in a poem with the details of what you see and hear and feel. You might like to add an eye-popping simile.

Memory poems

Sometimes I write poems that are based on a memory. Sometimes I use objects / things to JUMP START a memory. Write down as many objects and things as you can in 3 minutes. They can be as big as the sky or as small as a pin. They can be alive (like a cat or a dog), inside the house (like a chair, a sock, a teddy, a book, food, person), or outside the house (like a tree, river, sand, a ball, a person). Look at all the words and see which one JUMP STARTS a memory. Turn that memory of when you were younger into a poem.

Story poems

Poems can tell little stories. They can be real life, funny, imaginative, surprising, based on a myth or legend, based on a fascinating fact or event, full of action, use dialogue, have interesting characters. They can feature you! They can be long or short. Always listen to them. Check out three different ways to end the poem then pick your favourite.

Hot Tips

Ears Listen to your poems as you write them. Listen to your poem once you have finished. Any words or lines you want to change?

Eyes Go hunting for fascinating detail or words to make your poems come alive. Also, how does your poem look. Do the lines make a pattern or shape?

Have fun! At the end of the day poetry is play and enjoyment, and rules don't matter.

Poetry for Children - Aotearoa

Most New Zealand children's poetry books are out of print and very few get published each year. Here is a bibliography of some that you may find in your school or public library.

Paula Green ed, A Treasury of NZ Poetry for Children, Random House, 2014

Paula Green, The Letterbox Cat, Scholastic, 2014; Groovy Fish and other poems, The Cuba Press, 2019

Paula Green ed, Roar, Squeak, Purr: A NZ Treasury of Animal Poems, Penguin Random House, 2022

Joy Cowley, The Goobledgook Book, Gecko Press 2019

Margaret Mahy. The Word Witch, HarperCollins, 2009

Peter Bland, The Night Kite: Poems for Children, Mallinson Rendel, 2004

Selina Tusitala Marsh, Mophead: How your difference makes a difference, Auckland University Press, 2019, a poetic memoir by former Poet Laureate.

Bill Nagelkerke, The Night the Moon Fell Down, The Copy Press, 2019

Fiona Waters ed, Tiger Tiger, Burning Bright! An animal poem for every day of the year, Nosy Crow Ltd, 2020, UK but has NZ poets in it!

Susan Paris and Kate de Goldi, Annual 1, Gecko Press, 2016; and Annual 2, Massey University Press, 2017. You will find poems here for older children.

Susan Paris and Kate de Goldi, Skinny Dip Poetry, Massey University Press, 2021. Poems for older children.

Poetry Box

Follow NZ Poetry Box and keep in touch with what is happening in NZ Poetry for children, along with reviews of NZ children's books. Paula Green posts challenges and encouragement for children in New Zealand to enjoy!

Appendix: Poem Examples

List Poems

Lick Lick Riff

I'm a lick lick dog

I'm a quick quick dog

I'm a spinach ravioli dog

I'm a cream cannelloni dog

I'm a beach flying dog

I'm a hide and seek dog

I'm a chase the ball dog

I'm a hear the call dog

I'm a sweet sweet dog

I'm a meek meek dog

I'm a mushroom pizza dog

I'm a zooming cheetah dog

I'm a cheese spaghetti dog

I'm an extra raggy dog

I'm a tail flick dog

I'm a chew the stick dog

I'm a fetch the glove dog

I'm a loved loved dog

Paula Green, from Groovy Fish

Shoes

boat shoes

car shoes

bike shoes

goat shoes

giraffe shoes

kite shoes soap shoes

fluffy shoes

light shoes'

rope shoes

tough shoes

MY SHOES!

Paula Green, from Letterbox Cat

Swip swap day

a bird in her den

a fox in his burrow

a rabbit in her stables

a horse in his hive

a bee in her basket

a cat in his cave

a bat in her lair

a lion in his kennel

a dog in his web

a spider in her bed

a girl in her nest

fast asleep

Paula Green, from Groovy Fish

Postcard Poems

A Slow Sky Tonight

The clouds are moving across the sky like tiny snails, the trees whisper tiny secrets that nobody can hear and a pink light lights up the faraway hills.
Dinner is nearly ready.

Paula Green, from The Letterbox Cat

Te Henga, Bethells Beach

A washed-up log with roots like a messy beard.
Someone's riding a horse like a jockey that sends the dogs flying into the wild foamy waves.

Paula Green

Picture Poems

Check out some fabulous picture poems by children on NZ Poetry Box:

<https://nzpoetrybox.wordpress.com/2015/08/21/my-favourite-picture-poems/> and here:

<https://nzpoetrybox.wordpress.com/2015/09/24/the-finished-picture-poems-have-just-arrived-from-y34-at-fairburn-school-wow-i-adore-them/> from Paula Green's The Letterbox Cat:

Winter poems

Winter time

On the way to the beach today the icy ducks in the icy water the icy donkey on the icy paddock the icy sheep hiding in the icy fog the icy white bridge over the icy white stream the icy feet of the icy surfers on the icy sand, but there's shiny blue sky and hot soup steaming.

Paula Green

Winter

Some trees lose their leaves in winter.
They look like skinny bald men standing in the rain and sleet, but my cat gets so much extra fluff he waddles down the hallway like a puffed-up duck.

Paula Green, from The Letterbox Cat

Memory Poem

The Library

When I was a girl the town library was my free ticket to Mt Everest and stone-age caves to medieval banquets and magical pools to Joan of Arc and royal waves to outer space and why the rain falls.

Now I am older I write poems to take me to faraway times and faraway places, but I still like visiting libraries for books are like suitcases waiting to unpack new surprises.

Paula Green, from The Letterbox Cat

Story Poems

The Ball of Custard

One day a big gloopy ball of yellow custard went rolling down the street as if it were looking for a big gloopy slice of apple pie or a big gloopy mound of Christmas pudding but as it glooped and rolled and slooped and bowled over and over and over and over it picked up feathers and dust dead leaves and fluff so all the neighbours screamed at the feathery custardy monster.

Paula Green, from Groovy Fish

Washing

The very hungry wind spies the washing on the line

whip slash gobble whoosh

blue socks zebra tops

whip slash gobble whoosh

scruffy jeans puffy togs

whip slash gobble whoosh

beach towels board shorts.

The very hungry wind scoops up the clothes and spins woohoowoohoowoohoowohoo

and spins like a wild clothes dryer then tosses and flings

woohoowoohoowoohoowohoo

the washing right through the deep blue sky for the woman in the moon when she wakes.

Paula Green, from Groovy Fish